A STATEMENT OF CONSCIENCE ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Capital punishment is an exercise in senseless violence.

The killing of even the worst killers will gain nothing for society that could not be gained by less violent means, for example, by imprisonment.

Scores of studies in many countries over long periods of time fail to show that capital punishment reduces the number of murders.

This is also true of the killing of policemen. A 25-year comparison of more than 80 similar American cities showed that the death penalty made little difference to the rate of policemen killed. In fact, in places using the death penalty, the rate of police homicides was slightly higher.

We share the grief of those whose dear ones have been murdered. We share the anxiety about the innocent victims of brutal crimes. But understandable distress must not divert us from facing facts.

The death penalty cannot help yesterday's victims and it is unlikely to save tomorrow's targets. What it is certain to accomplish however, is the legitimization of useless killing. That is a result we must strive to avoid.

The Canadian Civil Liberties Association and the undersigned concerned citizens* call upon the Parliament of Canada, once and for all, to abolish capital punishment in this country.
