

LAW AND HISTORY WORKSHOP: FINAL PROGRAM

Location: Poet's Cove, South Pender Island
www.poetscove.com

Internet: www.HistoryOfRights.com/workshop.html

Date: 8 to 10 February 2008

All sessions take place in the Seaglass II & III (Ballroom) (unless otherwise specified).

Legal history is a vibrant and growing field of study, and yet there are a limited number of opportunities for scholars to meet in a single, interdisciplinary forum. The disciplinary divide between law, history, sociology, women's studies, political science and others remain strong. This weekend, scholars from around British Columbia and abroad will gather at Poet's Cove to find common ground and share their research in an interdisciplinary setting. The timing is propitious for holding a Law and History Workshop in British Columbia: The centenary of the British Columbia Court of Appeal is approaching in 2010 and the international Congress for the Social Sciences and Humanities will be hosted by the University of British Columbia in 2008.

The Workshop will encourage research and collaboration in the field of legal history and provide a venue for establishing new research networks. We also hope that the Workshop will be a useful forum for informally discussing prospects for creating a legal history society in Canada, organizing a national conference and developing Law and Society programs. The Workshop is composed of an equal number of early-career scholars and established scholars from numerous disciplines. In keeping with the workshop forum, the papers are available in advance from the conference website and all sessions will be full plenaries. The Workshop will follow this model: Each participant will provide a 15 minute summary of their research, followed by an extended discussion directly on that paper.
